Publishers. Earlier this week I was invited to attend a meeting where a small group of first year course coordinators in a particular discipline had arranged five different publishers to 'pitch' their textbooks and e-resources. Each effectively pitched for their own Learning Platform that comes with features such as Learning Analytics etc, each arguing that their resources integrate with the LMS via LTI. To the untrained ear such pitches can sound impressive of course, but in reality their technology can lead to a fractured experience for staff and students. I'm interested in:

understanding other institutions' concerns around publishers' technology, and gathering a snapshot of institutions' approach to dealing with publishers, and whether they:

- support publisher e-text only, technology, or both; for e-text, whether VitalSource or similar is utilised or direct publisher licensing;
- for technology, whether a centralised or decentralised approach is taken;
- who owns/manages what in the supply chain

E-Portfolios. In September Michael you collated a snapshot of Australasian ePortfolio use. Institutions were most generous in sharing their information, with 43 respondents. You followed up in late September asking about ePortfolio procurement. I didn't see any follow-up on that. I found the difference in response interesting, and so I'm curious if that's because of confidentiality concerns or other reasons?

My main question for institutions is around ePortfolio use. We know most institutions have an ePortfolio, predominantly Mahara or PebblePad. What we don't know is the level of use, the quality of use (hard to measure) and who owns ePortfolio use. For example, one often hears of ePortfolios being used in nursing or teaching, but is anyone using it in other disciplines? I'm interested in gathering a snapshot around ePortfolio use:

Level of use: Which disciplines use it?

Quality of use: Is there a specific strategy in place for it? If so, who owns the strategy?

Ownership: Who owns it? L&T, ITS, Marketing?

Nicola Parkin: Flinders

What seems to be everywhere at the moment is 'students as partners in their learning'. Our baby steps at Flinders are just beginning to show up some of the (cultural and infrastructural) challenges. I wonder if this is a space others are also playing in, and if so, are there ideas and lessons to share?
